RECOVERY
NETWORK

2016 ANNUAL REPORT

DEAR FRNDS,

What an exciting year for Food Recovery Network (FRN)! Looking back, there is a dizzying amount of hard work that led this year to be the year for FRN. Not only did we recover more food than in all other previous years combined, but in November 2015, we also reached a major milestone: one million pounds of food recovered! FRN saw a dramatic increase in requests to tell our story across the country as more higher education institutions and businesses became interested in recovering surplus food. We were featured in The Huffington Post, and paneled at the Food Tank Summit and Harvard Food Law and Policy Clinic's Reduce and Recover Conference. We also hosted two of our first-ever signature events, the National Food Recovery Dialogue and Lobby Day.

In just one year, FRN grew from 150 chapters to 191 and added eight new states into the network, bringing our reach to 43 states. We worked with more than 340 dining halls and food businesses to recover their surplus food and help them rethink the way they view and handle their surplus food. We were able to bring those food donations to more than 260 hunger-fighting community partners.

This year, we've focused on laying an even stronger foundation for FRN that will enable us to continue to grow and innovate in an ever-changing landscape as the country begins to awaken to the notion that good food should not be thrown away. It has been a privilege to work with such a dedicated and inspiring team at FRN, a team that is firm in our work: that higher education can be the first sector where food recovery is the norm and not the exception, and that this model can scale and translate to other sectors.

Internally, FRN hired our first-ever Chief of Staff, created our first-ever associate-level roles, hosted more interns than ever before, and increased our Board of Directors from seven to 10 members. We also focused our continuous learning efforts to increase our evaluation acumen, and made it a priority to ensure the network's voice was represented at the policy level. Involvement like this will be critical as we turn the corner to FRN's five-year anniversary. With FRN's upcoming anniversary and the unveiling of our new strategic plan, there comes plenty of events and programming for all of you to connect and deepen your relationship with FRN.

We look forward to working with all of you as FRN takes a big leap forward to accelerate our impact across the country. We're reminded every day that a movement sustains itself with dedicated people who are willing to hold tight to a vision — a bright light — that is in the distance. With all of your help, we will get there that much faster, to a place where we can say definitively that food recovery is the standard in higher education.

OUR WORK

The United States faces an alarming paradox: 40 percent of all food produced is wasted, while one in six Americans is food insecure. Food waste costs Americans $165 billion every year, accounts for 25 percent of freshwater use, and constitutes 23 percent of methane emissions. The number one item in landfills is not paper, metal or plastic — it's food. And not just scraps of food, but edible food that should never have entered a landfill in the first place.

At Food Recovery Network (FRN), we believe that food recovery — the process of donating surplus food rather than sending it to landfills — is a simple, effective, and sustainable solution to broader environmental and social challenges. In just five years since our founding, FRN has scaled from one student group to a 501(c)3-certified national nonprofit with 191 chapters in 43 states. We've changed how dining establishments handle food waste, redirecting more than 1.4 million pounds of good, nutritious food away from landfills and onto the plates of those who need it most. That's the equivalent of a year's worth of meals for more than 1,000 Americans.

FRN unites students on college campuses to fight food waste and hunger by recovering surplus food from their campus communities and donating it to those in need.

This impacts behavior on multiple levels:

- Food donors reduce the amount of food they purchase to adjust for over-ordering and improve best practices.
- Students become more aware of their role in reducing food waste as consumers, gain leadership development, and better connect with their communities.
- Community partners learn about food waste and recovery from FRN chapters and use that information when considering ways to most effectively use their resources.

Our model provides direct, immediate impact by significantly alleviating food waste and hunger, and creates a network of knowledge that eliminates fears around food donation. FRN continues to transform the way communities view and handle surplus food with hopes that food recovery will become as commonplace as recycling. And with more than 3,000 student volunteers who partner with more than 260 hunger-fighting community partners and work with more than 340 food donors, we can confidently say we're building the next generation of social and environmental leaders while empowering communities to change the way they view and handle surplus food.

PARTNERSHIPS

Food Recovery Network is proud to partner with numerous stakeholders across sectors. We continually build new relationships to bridge the gap between universities and their wider communities, replacing barriers with partnerships to build stronger, more inclusive food systems. Primary partners include higher education dining providers, food businesses, hunger-fighting community partners, funders, and other nonprofits.

By the Numbers:

- 10+ major funders
- 340+ food donors

REGIONAL OUTREACH COORDINATORS (ROCS)

In partnership with the Sodexo Foundation, Food Recovery Network launched our first ever Regional Outreach Coordinators (ROCs) program. This exciting new pilot program provides FRN student leaders with the opportunity to engage meaningfully with FRN National and with FRN chapters in their geographic region. ROCs have been serving as liaisons between FRN chapters and FRN National by working with our diverse network of chapters on the ground in order to engage more students in the movement and increase the capacity of existing chapters fighting hunger in their communities. Our ROCs program is an innovative way to scale FRN's presence while still maintaining meaningful relationships. We're excited to see our ROCs continue their inspiring work in 2017!

This year's ROCs are Alice Zhou, Allison Blakely, Hillary Kinney, and Micah Heaney. Alice and Allison work with 12 chapters in New York, while Hilary and Micah work with 32 chapters in the Mid-Atlantic region. They co-hosted two breakout sessions at the National Food Recovery Dialogue, where they met with student leaders to troubleshoot a variety of logistical problems. In the summer, they gathered at FRN HQ for a three-day retreat where they provided valuable feedback on FRN's function and resources, and participated in in-depth leadership and skill-building workshops.

ONE MILLION POUNDS

In November 2015, we hit our largest milestone to date: one million pounds of food recovered! In an effort to thank our student leaders throughout the network, we asked our chapters to celebrate with us by using #FRN1Mil on their social media channels.

Thank you to our student leaders, partners, and funders who helped us reach our one million pound milestone. Join us as we count up towards two million pounds of food recovered and donated.

2016 NATIONAL FOOD RECOVERY DIALOGUE

From April 2-4, FRN hosted the first-ever National Food Recovery Dialogue (NFRD). The epic event convened more than 300 students from 91 campuses at the University of Maryland in College Park, the location of FRN's flagship chapter, to celebrate our achievements in food recovery.

Joining FRN students were more than 120 additional attendees representing dining services, local and national nonprofits, leading food recovery and food justice organizations, federal agencies, and local supporters. Together through workshops, panels, and presentations, we inspired and promoted continued leadership and skill-building to tackle the world's biggest problems with practical solutions.

STUDENTS SAID...

- ❖ 97% of survey respondents reported that "The Dialogue exposed me to new ideas"
- ❖ 97% of survey respondents agreed or strongly agreed that after attending the NFRD, "I feel like I am part of a national movement"

"I really liked the emphasis on the social justice side of why FRN does our work, such as the Faces of Homelessness panel or the public health approach to food waste. These events really reignited my passion for why we do what we do."

FRN STUDENT

"The NFRD changed my life. I cried and I laughed, but most importantly I haven't stopped feeling inspired and empowered since the conference began on Friday evening/ Saturday morning. The NFRD made me want to pursue this type of work as a potential career path."

FRN STUDENT

"I had an amazing time and congrats to [FRN] National for putting on such an amazing weekend. I learned so much and feel so empowered to do big things. I felt truly inspired by the entire weekend!"

FRN STUDENT

"Getting the chance to be surrounded by like-minded movers and shakers was the best part about participating in the NFRD 2016. I was able to connect with other student leaders around the country and compare ideas and strategies that will make each of our chapters better. I left the conference more inspired than ever to do my part in fighting food waste and to inspire others to join me. Thank you FRN for the opportunity! I look forward to seeing you all next year!"

BLAIRE JEFFERSON

PRESIDENT OF FRN AT CHRISTIAN BROTHERS UNIVERSITY

On April 4, more than 100 student leaders, co-founders, and staff members participated in FRN's first-ever Lobby Day. Groups met with 28 Congressional offices to advocate for Representative Chellie Pingree's (D-ME) Food Recovery Act and Representative Jerry McNerney's (D-CA) Food Waste Accountability Act by sharing their firsthand experiences fighting food waste and hunger. Students also advocated for national legislation to accomplish the USDA and EPA's ambitious goal to reduce food waste in the U.S. by half by the year 2030.

Through this incredible lobbying effort, FRN students secured three new co-sponsors to the Food Recovery Act. Since Lobby Day, Congresswoman Pingree introduced legislation in partnership with Congressman Richard Blumenthal to standardize national date labelling guidelines, another critical and exciting step towards minimizing food waste.

"It was amazing to see the shock and interest on government workers' faces as we told them about what we do, and also about what they can do to help. The thought that we, as humble students, possibly influenced our lawmakers to make positive change is a memory I'll keep forever."

FOOD RECOVERY CERTIFIED

Food Recovery Certified (FRC) is FRN's certification program that recognizes businesses that recover food at least once a month. With nearly 100 certified establishments and events in its first year alone, Food Recovery Network is excited about FRC's growth. Here at FRN, we imagine a world where consumers choose to spend their dollars at environmentally responsible establishments, and with our current numbers and innovative plans for the future, this vision is well on its way to becoming a reality. Be on the lookout for Food Recovery Verified (FRV), just launched!

We've had great success in our pilot run and want to congratulate pioneers Sodexo Corporation and Bon Appétit Management Company, for their commitment to fighting food waste in their dining halls and kitchens.

LOOKING FORWARD

2016 was our biggest year to date, and we're gearing up to make an even greater impact: next year, we want to bring FRN to all 50 states in order to make higher education the first sector in which food recovery is standard practice. By May 2017, we aim to have 230 chapters across the nation who have collectively recovered more than 1.6 million pounds of food. We plan to host our second annual National Food Recovery Dialogue (NFRD), and to continue Lobby Day as a way to translate our collective ideas into action by continuing to advocate for sustainable food policy.

We look forward to working with you to make 2017 even stronger.
